
Let's Kiss the Bloodiest Century In History Goodbye

The 20th was some century.

It had more technical and scientific progress than any other century in history, but it was unprecedented for pure human horror, too.

It was as if humanity was torn between its best instincts and its worst.

Two world wars with a combined total of more than 100 million military and civilian dead, including millions in genocidal holocausts. And that's just the "tip of the iceberg."

Meanwhile, there has been another more silent holocaust going on for nearly half a century, too. It's called abortion.

It's "silent" because the mass media would rather not publicize the numbers – over 54.3 million abortions in the United States alone. That's 30% of our younger generation — or nearly 1 out of 6 of all living Americans.

The toll already equals the population of our 73 largest cities. It's as if we had a nuclear war and no one noticed.

Worldwide, more than 1.5 billion babies have been aborted, contributing to a demographic decline that experts like Peter Drucker have called "the most important management challenge of the 21st Century."

We're already feeling its impact in the growing economic crisis that is spreading like an epidemic throughout the West.

Yet those who favor abortion still think abortion is not accessible enough.

Negative population growth advocates have set goals of reducing U.S. population to 150 million people by 2100. That's less than half as many people as we have today.

They hold up Italy as a model for the world — with a total fertility rate of 1.3. What they don't tell you is that if we achieved it, humanity would face extinction within 400 years.

They also don't want to acknowledge the economic collapse that we have been predicting since 1994 based on actual demographic trends. They prefer to ignore the common sense reality that families and children are the best way we have of investing in the future.

There is just no way we can have a growth economy with a birth rate that has declined by 43% since 1960.

No kids, no future. It's that simple.

To turn these trends around, we need to work to restore the traditional family values that made our country great. Tweaking taxes and cutting spending is not enough to restore our economy. We need to change hearts and minds as well. But that takes money and effort.

That's the reason for this Campaign for Life. You can help end "the silent holocaust" by sending us your Campaign for Life donation today.
